With Tucson being a college town, it's not surprising that broke young people have made this southern Arizona city a vintage shopping haven. From the carefully curated collection at Desert Vintage to the effortlessly hip How Sweet it Was Vintage, retro lovers will find no shortage of options in Tucson.

While you will indeed find plenty of loud, palm tree-patterned shirts in Honolulu's thriving thrift shop scene, you'll also find lots of other types of retro clothing and furnishings, too. The owner of DeStash is partial to vintage fabrics and accessories, slow-stitching, and unique detailed embroidery. Harbors Vintage Waikiki offers a large selection of vintage tees and streetwear.

Maybe it's due to its generations of tough, no-nonsense steel workers, but for whatever reason, Pittsburgh is home to numerous resale shops. Vintage 416 is a "sustainable and affordable alternative to fast fashion," while Hey Betty offers a curated collection that caters to actors and costume designers in addition to regular folks.

The capital of Texas, Austin has a capital selection of vintage stores. Blackfeather Vintage Works, for example, offers chic clothing and accessories, and shoppers will often find live music at the store, too. Bloomers and Frocks specializes in clothing from 1910 through the 1980s.

Next time you're in Denver, swing by Atomic Salvage Vintage, a shop featuring not only vintage clothing, but also handmade pieces. Goldmine Vintage offers goods that date from the Victorian era to the '90s, while Little Pieces of my Heart specializes in clothing inspired by rock and roll.

As the birthplace of grunge—both the music and the clothing style— it’s no surprise that Seattle is home to numerous vintage shops. Late Night Vintage Shop opens at 3 p.m. and features a number of vendors, for a diverse selection of vintage items. Red Light Vintage sells clothing from every era, going back a century.

It makes sense that Washington, D.C., a city steeped in history, would excel in old clothing, as well. Vintage shoppers will find numerous shops specializing in retro clothes, furnishings, and even vinyl records.
